Idaho Memorial Association

Boise, (Special)—Reassuring reports are coming in from all sections of the state to State Chairman, Paul Davis, concerning the campaign for the Idaho Memorial at the State University. Practically every county in the state has started in earnest to raise its quota and several counties have gone over the top with a vengeance. The latest report from Shoshone county shows that the first day of the drive netted $15,000, out of a quota of $25,000, and the organization in that county guarantee an over-subscription. Reports from other Northern counties are almost equally encouraging with several already over the top.

The Ada county drive was materially aided by the Thanksgiving Day football contest between the State University and the University of Nevada for a large number of alumni and former students were in the city and gave their pledge for the Memorial. County Chairman, Governor James H. Hawley, has organized a "Special Gift" drive as a feature of the campaign in the coming week and many large business houses and corporations have given assurance that gifts will be made toward this commendable enterprise.

While the counties of the Southeast are slower in getting under way, the first reports from Twin Falls and Butte counties were especially pleasing.

"It is an interesting fact that the counties which made greater sacrifices during the war have responded most liberally to keep faith with their fallen sons," said State Chairman Davis in reviewing the situation.

"We expect that every county with two exceptions, will have accomplished their tasks in this drive by the end of the week."

A Start in Right Direction

While it has been known for a considerable length of time that this section was an ideal spot for the growing of cherries and other soft fruits, until this fall no general effort has been made to increase the production but since the handsome returns from last spring's crop, many of the growers have awakened to the fact that fruit growing is a pleasant and profitable business. This fall some 2,500 cherry and 500 apricot trees were shipped into Juliaetta and next spring fifteen-hundred more received. So far as we could learn, Carl and Marion Porter and their associates were the largest shippers. They formed a local company and purchased the Elmer Stewart place on the bench west of town and are setting about 20 acres of it to cherries. They are spacing the trees 40 feet apart and filling between with apricots. Ray Harris and N. C. Halliday, just across Potlatch creek are each planting about 7 acres to the same variety of fruit. The rest of the shipment was scattered among several parties.

Of course this is only a small percentage of the trees that could be used in this district and we hope that now they have made a start they will keep on until this section shall become known—as it should—throughout the United States as the greatest and best cherry producing section of Idaho if not of the whole Northwest.

We have been reliably informed that the Oregon Packing Co. is willing to enter into contract to take all the Royal Anne cherries that can be produced on 50 or 60 acres for the next 20 years at 5 cents per pound. It seems to us that this should be some inducement to fruit growers.

SHOP EARLY

Last year, through the generous cooperation of the press, the movies and other advertising mediums, Christmas mailers were induced to dispatch their Yuletide presents earlier in the month than ever before in the history of the institution of gift exchanging in the holiday season.

As a result, the spectacle of the last minute rush of former years, with its attendant heart-breaking labor on the part of wearied and nerve worn store clerks and postal employees, was avoided.

This year Postmaster General New and First Assistant Postmaster General John H. Bartlett have determined to make an even better record and to banish for all time the suffering undergone in past years by those engaged in the sale or transportation of gifts. They hope to make "Shop Early" and "Mail Early" a habit with the American people.

Mailing early does not mean December 1 or before, but if everyone could get their holiday tokens in the mail between December 10 and December 20, the post office could not ask more.

Particular attention this year will be paid to greeting cards. Despite the success last year it was noted that the last-minute mail consisted largely of cards. Possibly many of them were returned greetings to friends, heard from on a previous mail, but overlooked on the original Christmas list. Unlike parcels and letters containing money orders, cards, of course, can not well be marked "Do Not Open Until Christmas."

Therefore, it is possible that the many mailers hold them until the last to insure delivery Christmas Eve. This class of mailers this year however, may find their cards undelivered until after Christmas Day.

Believing that the energies of postal employees should not be sapped to the last degree for an avoidable reason, and, in return upon securing for them the same Christmas privileges enjoyed by others. Postmaster General New asks the hearty cooperation of the public. The last-minute, or zero hour has been moved up so that all postal employees may eat their Christmas dinners at home. Rural carriers will deliver no mail at all on Christmas day and clerks and carriers in the city offices will stop work promptly at noon.

School Notes

Owing to the illness of Forrest Gallaher, who was one of the cast, it has been necessary to postpone the high school play to a later date.

The following students in the eighth grade have an 100 in spelling for each day of last month: Gertrude Fox, Ida Fox, Audrey Nigh, Clara Nye, Joe Alexander and Arthur Clark. In the seventh grade: Audrey Kraemer and Mabel Connick. The average for eighth grade is 99 per cent, while that for the seventh grade is 98 per cent.

Last Wednesday afternoon the children of Mrs. Porter's room brought popcorn and had a popcorn party.

There has been quite a few new pupils enter school recently: Harriet Noble in the ninth grade, Foide Bay in the eighth grade, Bernice Woodruff in the seventh grade and Charles Noble Arthur and John Woodruff and Vere Moore in the primary room.

Today the Girls Black and Orange league will launch their campaign for the sale of Christmas seals. The sale is for the benefit of the Idaho Anti-Tuberculosis association an organization which is doing an immense amount of good throughout the state and locally in stamping out the "Great White Plague."

Last year through the generosity of this organization the local school was provided with a scales which has proven to be of great benefit in the health promotion work of the school. Not only in this, but in many other ways the association has shown its interest in this community, and the girls are confident that every resident of Juliaetta will give his staunch support in return by buying as many of the seals as his means will permit.

The N. P. railway has been experimenting in curtailing train services lately. They removed the local freight from this branch but it was off less than a week. The Highball could not handle all the business. On the Genesee branch the daily passenger was removed and a mixed train substituted, with no service at all on Sunday.

THIS WOMAN RELIEVED FROM SUFFERING

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A Remarkable Story

Dover, Del.—"I wish every woman would take your wonderful medicine as it has done so much good to me. I had cramps and very bad pains. One day I was over to my neighbor's house and she told me I ought to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. So I went to the store on my way home and got a bottle and took the first dose before supper. I have been taking it ever since, and you can hardly believe how different I feel. I had just wanted to lie in bed all the time, and when I started to brush up I would give out in about ten minutes. So you know how badly I felt. I used to go to bed at eight and get up at seven, still tired. Now I can work all day and stay up until eleven, and feel all right all the time. My housework is all I do in summer, but in winter I work in a factory. I have told a good many of my friends, and I have had three come to me and tell me they wouldn't do without the Vegetable Compound."

—Mrs. SAMUEL MURPHY, 219 Cecil St., Dover, Delaware.

CHAPTER VII—Continued

As it fell, the other leaped at her as if strung upon wires. Joan saw, very dimly, the face of Mrs. Dana. She was in her nightdress, with her feet bare, and the ferocity of her attack seemed atrocious in contrast with the expressionless, masklike features. Only the eyes seemed alive, and they burned with implacable hatred, as if they meditated revenge for all the accumulation of a life's wrongs.

The woman bore Joan backward. The lamp fell crashing to the floor in a debacle of splintered glass. A chair was overturned. Mrs. Dana's hands sought Joan's throat, and they struggled in the darkness, crashing here and there, upsetting the water picher, smashing into the swinging door. Underneath her Joan heard Mrs. Fraser moving, and doors opening. There were steps on the stairs.

For a few moments Joan felt no watch for the onset of the madwoman. But Mrs. Dana's impulse was soon exhausted. Joan got her arms about her body, pressing down the other's arms to her sides. Mrs. Dana suddenly became passive, and the lights in the eyes seemed to go out like extinguished candles as the brain clouded. Joan got the woman into the corridor. At the farther end a little lamp was burning.

Mrs. Dana went with her quietly, walking like a mechanical figure. At the head of the stairs appeared the matron, wearing a white wrapper. Behind her Joan saw the startled faces of Myers and Lancaster.

The girl led Mrs. Dana into her room, and Mrs. Fraser came at her heels, breathing hard in terror.

"Did she hurt you?" she gasped. "How did she get out? Who let her out? I should have told you she was dangerous, but I never dreamed that she could pick that lock. Did she—did she try to harm you?"

"She had a piece of glass," said Joan, "but I took it away from her."

"There was no glass in her room last evening," said the matron with conviction.

Lancaster was approaching. Joan was astounded to see the look of anger on his face. "Who opened that door?" he shouted.

"It's all right now, Doctor Lancaster," came the matron's voice from within.

But Lancaster was shaking with excitement. He swung round upon Myers.

"You are responsible for this!" he cried. "You know my one point that has to be carried out. I told you to have a bolt put on the door after she got out before."

"Now, now, doctor, don't excite yourself," said the secretary soothingly. "You're a sick man, you know. It was unfortunate, but I'll see it doesn't happen again."

Lancaster seemed beside himself with fury, far more angry, indeed, than the situation appeared to warrant.

"She might have killed Miss Wentworth!" he stormed. "I've stood enough from you without this. I've suffered you, God knows, until you've sapped my strength and crushed me under your feet, and made me less of a man than the meanest drunkard in Millville, but now it's ended. Get out of my sight! Leave the institute tomorrow!"

"Say," shouted Myers, "am I responsible if that woman got out of her room? What's the sense of picking on me? Didn't you hire a nurse to take care of your patients. Ain't Mrs. Dana a patient? Now there's been enough said, I reckon. You know what I mean, doctor. Better go back to your room and forget what you've said tonight."

"If ever I see your face after tonight, by G—d I'll kill you!" shouted Lancaster.

Myers slunk away toward the stairs. "O, all right, all right," he answered. "I reckon you'll be sorry tomorrow. But I'll hold you to what you've said. I ain't going to see that nurse bust up any work here."

"How did it happen, Mrs. Fraser?" asked Lancaster.

The matron snapped the key in the lock before answering. "I don't know, Doctor Lancaster," she answered. "The lock's all right. It couldn't have been picked. And I swear I locked it last night. Somebody must have let her out."

"That hound—" began Lancaster, but Joan interposed. "She may have found a key," she said.

The matron shook her head. "No key would fit that lock, except the right one," she answered.

"Why should anyone tamper with that lock?" Lancaster muttered. Suddenly he broke down and covered his face with his hands. His shoulders shook convulsively. Joan put her hand on his arm.

"Doctor Lancaster, you must go back to your room now," she said. "It was nothing, and it is all ended."

"Miss Wentworth, if you will stay with me till six it will help me to master myself. It is not the wear of yielding to morphine; it is my thoughts. If you knew how one's life comes crowding upon one in the darkness—"

"I'll stay with you," said Joan.

"Let us wait on the veranda," said Lancaster. "The air is stifling in this house. Put on a wrap and I will wait for you there."

Joan ran upstairs and slipped on her cloak. When she got back Lancaster had not moved from the door. The secretary was packing noisily in his room.

They went outside together, closing the front door behind them, as if to shut in the evil influences in the place.

"The Hound!" began Lancaster, but Joan interposed.

There was a hint of morning in the air, in its freshness, in the paling of the night above the eastern mountains.

Lancaster led the way toward the chairs at the end of the veranda and wiped the dew from them with his handkerchief.

"When you came here," he said, as they sat down, "when on the impulse I asked you to come here, I did not dream that my impulse was the prompting of my good angel."

"You said I was your good angel," said Joan lightly.

"It was more than chance," said Lancaster seriously. "It was the happiest thing that has ever come to me."

"Doctor Lancaster, I am only too glad to have had the opportunity of being of service. It is what every nurse would have wished."

"No," he corrected her. "You have brought more than service into the institute. Do you know what you have brought? Hope!"

She could hardly restrain her tears, so deeply was she moved. She put her hand upon his. "Doctor Lancaster, it must never leave you again," she answered. "Lift up your eyes and look at the hills. How can one help but hope? Hope lies all about you."

"When a man lives in darkness," said Lancaster gravely, "he cannot lift up his eyes. I was broken long before I became a victim of that damnable drug. I fell into the hands of unscrupulous men. I had nothing to live for. I dwelt in shadows, hardly knowing the dream from the reality, and all the men and women about me seemed like shadows until you came. I could endure my life only because of its unreality; it was like a dream, a nightmare, which, I knew, could not last forever."

She did not answer, and he remained silent for a long time. It began to lighten. Streaks of saffron appeared against the tops of the hills. A bird awoke and called; another answered her.

"But this is hope," said Lancaster, taking Joan's hand. "You have brought it to me, and I am never going to lose it again. I am going to win my fight against the drug, and then I am going to regain all else that I have lost."

He seemed upon the verge of a revelation, but he said no more. And now the day was dawning.

"You have made a splendid fight, Doctor Lancaster," she said. "Now you shall have your hypodermic."

He rose up eagerly, and she could see the terrific strain that he was undergoing in the trembling of his limbs, the eager look in his eyes. They went back into the house. A light still burned in the secretary's room, but no sound came from it. At the door of Lancaster's room he stopped.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, "I have something to say, and something to promise. I am not going to take that dose. Tonight, perhaps, but not now. If I take it and free my body from its suffering, I lose my soul again. I lose that hope which you have given me. And—I want to give you this."

He handed her a little bottle of morphine, three-quarters full.

"It is the bottle which you took from the drawer of my desk yesterday," he said. "I stole it from your pocket when you leaned over me last night, when you told me I was winning. I was a thief—but I am a penitent thief, and I restore it intact."

"No, Doctor Lancaster," answered the girl, smiling as she took the bottle from him. "That has no bearing upon your character; it was a symptom of your disease."

"Well, I didn't take any," said Lancaster, with the transient flash of humor lighting up his face. "I had the hardest conceivable battle over that bottle. I set it up before me, and I held my right hand back with my left, and I said, 'I am winning, in Joan Wentworth's name.' And at last the drug devil was beaten. And no more morphine until tonight."

"Doctor Lancaster, you have been brave and wonderful!" cried Joan, profoundly stirred. "Remember that! One of the bravest men I have ever known. Never tell me again that you have lost your power of will. We are winning fast."

He placed his hands upon her shoulders and stood looking at her. Upon his face was an expression of indulgence, as if he was considering her enthusiasm in the light of his experience of life, so much deeper than hers, so much the more profound. Then the look passed; the years seemed to fall from him, and strength came into his face.

"God bless you, my dear," he said, and bent and kissed her forehead.

She turned and ran upstairs. Her heart was singing in her breast. The flood of sunlight that came through the eastern windows, illuminating the dusty interior of the old building, seemed like a spiritual light, flaming into this dark place where shadows had dwelt so long. She went into her room and dressed for the day. She had never felt so happy before. And now the life in Avonmouth had become as dim as a dream, and she cared no longer whether she returned or not. A charge had been granted to her, a man's life put into her keeping; that trust she meant to fulfill.

She had saved Lancaster, and she would outwit Myers, and remove the only obstacle to Lancaster's recovery. She knew the man incited the doctor to drug himself. She would have known that even without the matron's statement to her. But why should Myers wish Lancaster to drug himself to death?

He must be acting for others. Whom? No matter. Once the drug evil was overcome, the plot would be revealed and overthrown.

As she stood at her window Joan heard footsteps on the path below. Looking down, she saw the secretary leaving the house, carrying a suitcase. Her heart almost stood still. Surely Myers had not acknowledged defeat and taken Lancaster at his word? Surely he did not mean to go without another struggle?

She watched him cross the grass beside the chicken coop to where the weed-grown path joined the winding road. He was outside the grounds of the institute now, and he was still going in the direction of the station. He disappeared behind the hedges, appeared again, a long way off, and vanished finally. He was gone, and the air seemed the sweeter, the day more glorious.

Joan almost danced downstairs to the dining room. Lancaster was at the table, waiting for her.

"Mr. Myers has gone away!" she cried. "Doctor Lancaster, your evil spirit has departed, suitcase and all."

Lancaster looked at her gravely. "I know," he said.

"Did he come to you? Did you discharge him?"

"Did he come to me. He did not tell the matron he was going. It looks bad."

"No," said Joan firmly, struggling against her conviction. "He was afraid. You will never see him again."

"You know what the Bible says about the unclean spirit who leaves a man, and returns with seven others, when he finds his home swept and garnished?"

"Doctor Lancaster, he has no hold on you. He can do nothing, and he will never dare to return."

"Well, my dear, we have a respite, at all events," Lancaster answered. "So let us eat our breakfast, and afterward I'll take you for a ramble through the woods, and we'll hold the fort together until evening."

75% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons are formed in the accumulated food waste, and reach all parts of the body. The first results, headaches, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness", etc., serve as warnings of graver diseases to follow if this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste, and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Measured for Dowries

A quaint ceremony is observed at Roydon, in Norfolk, England, the Philadelphia Inquirer says.

About 300 years ago the lord of the manor bequeathed the sum of £1,000, the interest from which was to be voted annually to provide dowries for four brides. Under the terms of the bequest the money has to be divided between the youngest, the eldest, the shortest and the tallest brides married during the course of each year in the parish church.

This entails the "measuring of the bride." After the marriage ceremony the bride and bridegroom proceed to the vestry to sign the register and the bride is then measured by the officiating minister. In order that her correct stature may be ascertained she is required to remove her shoes and let down her hair. At the end of the year the marriage records are examined and the dowries awarded to those qualified to receive them.

CALLES TAKES OFFICIAL OATH

OBREGON ACCOMPANIES NEW PRESIDENT TO MEXICO; CROWD IS PRESENT

Samuel Gompers and Large Delegation from Labor Organizations Take Active Part in Ceremonies

Mexico City, — General P. Elias Calles last Sunday at noon took the oath as president of the republic of Mexico.

The great national stadium in which the ceremony took place was crowded with a vast assembly which taxed the seating capacity of 25,000. Brilliantly uniformed cadets from San Jacinto military academy with an infantry regiment guarded the entrance to the enclosed platform where General Calles took the oath.

Fronting the presidential stand were platforms occupied by the members of congress, the diplomatic missions, justices of the supreme court, state governors and high political and military officials. A portion of the arena was reserved at the special request of the retiring president, General Obregon, for more than 600 crippled soldiers, many of whom were victims of the latest revolution.

On request of President-elect Calles, General Obregon accompanied him from the palace to the stadium and occupied a seat with him on the platform. Colonel Filiberto Gomez, president of the lower house, administered the oath of office.

The ceremony was extremely simple. Upon the arrival of the president-elect both houses of congress were summoned into joint session, and Colonel Gomez repeated the oath. Transmission of the executive power was effected and General Calles was invested with the right to wear across his chest a green, white and red band bearing the national coat of arms, which constitutes the insignia of his office. The silk tricolor, with a gorgeously embroidered eagle shield, which President Calles will wear upon state occasions, was the work of convicts in the federal district penitentiary. It was presented to the president-elect on the eve of his inauguration.

James Rockwell Sheffield, the American ambassador, was unable to attend on account of illness, but the United States was represented by H. F. Arthur Schofield, counselor of the embassy. Other countries represented by ministers with special inaugural credentials were France, Spain and Japan.

The most commented upon labor delegation was that from the American Federation of Labor, headed by its president, Samuel Gompers. The delegation consisted of about 300 members and occupied a reserved section. Similar arrangements were made for seating the many excursionists from New Orleans, Laredo, San Antonio, St. Louis, Little Rock, Houston and Dallas, the foreign office, which was charged with the arrangements for the inaugural delegation from the United States, estimating the total number of American delegates at nearly 1000.

Deposits Show Heavy Increase

New York, — An increase of nearly 148 per cent in savings deposits in the United States during the past twelve years is reported by the American Bankers association, which has just completed a survey of the subject. In 1912 a total of $8,425,275,000 was in deposit as savings accounts in mutual savings banks, state banks, trust companies, private banks and national banks. During the ensuing twelve years this total has increased to $20,873,562,000, while the number of savings depositors has increased more than three-fold, from 12,534,316 to 38,867,994. Per capita savings, the report of the association shows, expanded from $89 to $186, an increase of 109 per cent. The number of savings depositors were unobtainable in seventeen states, the report explains, and the figures would be considerably increased were it possible to add these.

Cuttyhunk, Mass., — Wreckage evidence of possible tragedy which overtook some vessel in the storm which swept the New England coast, was washed ashore near the Cuttyhunk coast guard station. A lot of funny things go through the mails. One morning Senator McKinley, in Washington, received a request from an aged constituent to see what could be done to hurry along his pension.

"I heard you make a speech the last time you were in town," he wrote, "and you had some good things in it that I laughed at. In fact, I laughed so hard that one of my teeth came out. I enclose the tooth."

The senator says this is the strangest proof of fealty and token of esteem that has ever come to him in his whole political career.—Houston Post.
